Status of US-Soviet Relations
Outlined by Kosygin and Gromyko

Soviet Premier Kosygin and Foreign Minister Gromyko have recently both gone on record about the status of Soviet relations with the US.

Gromyko wrote an article in the current issue of the party theoretical journal Kommunist that probably is a warmup for the party congress next year. Kosygin's remarks were made in talks last week with Sargent Shriver and Dr. Guyford Stever, President Ford's science adviser.

The Soviet foreign minister touches on most aspects of relations with the US, including a favorable reference to General Secretary Brezhnev's coming visit to Washington. Gromyko seems to give somewhat greater weight to negative aspects of US-Soviet ties than did Kosygin.

Gromyko refers to the fact that trade relations are still not normal and goes on to express uncertainty about whether US policy-making "circles" will be able to get economic relations with the USSR squared away. He introduces a new theme when he says that US-Soviet relations are being complicated by "notorious" US actions in "some" parts of the world.

Gromyko writes that the USSR will continue to try to improve Soviet-US relations, but adds that, as before, the USSR will not waive its legitimate interests or those of its allies and friends.

Gromyko's rather sharp remarks seem designed to impress upon the party faithful that the Soviet Union is still tough and vigilant.

Kosygin told Shriver last week that over the next five years the USSR, in addition to grain purchases, hopes to raise the level of trade with the US to an average of $2 billion annually.

He said he was willing to conclude 5-, 10-, or 15-year trade agreements with the US on both grain and oil, although he called linkage between the two commodities "outmoded." He said the USSR is interested in obtaining $3 billion in Eurodollar credits over the next five years to finance expansion of its oil and gas production.

Kosygin endorsed an increase in scientific and technological exchanges, a subject to which he returned the following day in a conversation with Stever, who had been in Moscow to help chair the fourth session of the joint commission on scientific and technical cooperation.

The Soviet premier stressed that the time had come to proceed to specific joint research and development programs. He suggested that the US and the USSR select two or three large projects to demonstrate the tangible benefits of bilateral cooperation.

Kosygin told Stever that the Soviet government would be willing to allocate the necessary resources and observed that a few such projects would be useful in building trust between the two nations. Kosygin proposed the joint construction of advanced metallurgical plants and hospitals, and the joint solution of a transportation problem in each country.

Kosygin frequently has spoken on behalf of greater East-West economic cooperation. His reiteration of this theme at this time implies that the USSR intends to pursue a foreign policy that promotes expanded scientific, technical, and economic cooperation despite a variety of bilateral problems.

Soviets Stage Protest in Peking

Yugoslav Premier Bijedic's visit to China began on a sour note Monday when Soviet Ambassador Tolstikov led a walkout from an official banquet.

All envoys from the Soviet camp except the Cuban and Romanian ambassadors left after Chinese Deputy Premier Teng Hsiao-ping said that "the most dangerous source of war is the superpower most zealous in preaching peace." The previous Soviet protest of this kind in Peking took place in 1972. The walk-out yesterday is significant because Teng's anti-Soviet statement did not go beyond language he had used at the recent reception held for North Vietnamese party chief Le Duan; Tolstikov did not leave on that occasion.

Yugoslav media commentaries on Bijedic's visit have tried to avoid the Sino-Soviet conflict, stressing that economic relations and an exchange of views on foreign affairs were to be the prime topics on the agenda. One Yugoslav commentator said last Friday that Belgrade is ready to reopen suspended relations between the two Communist parties, but admitted this might take a long time.

Chinese diplomats in Belgrade have said there is no possibility of an early resumption of party ties. If this is true, President Tito may not send his chief aide for party affairs, Stane Dolanc, to China this month, as he had hoped.

Yugoslav leaders suspect--probably correctly-- that Peking would not hesitate to embroil Belgrade in its conflict with Moscow.

Highlights of the 15th East
German Communist Party Plenum

Discussions at the 15th plenum of the party Central Committee, held in East Berlin on October 2-3, centered on preparations for the party's 9th congress in May 1976. The plenum approved the Politburo's report on economic (specifically consumer) policies, gave a qualified endorsement of the results of the Helsinki conference, and prepared the groundwork for the 1975-76 pre-congress elections.

Although party chief Honecker's keynote address on the 3rd and the Politburo's report of the 2nd selectively praised the success of the European security talks, both Honecker and Hermann Axen, the party's expert on international relations, indicated that security continues to take preference over the freer movement of peoples and ideas. For instance, Axen stressed that questions of economic and cultural cooperation contained in the Helsinki documents "have the character of recommendations and their implementation must be achieved in sovereign decisions of the states within the scope of their own laws and through bilateral or multilateral agreements with other states."

In the economic sector, both the Politburo report and Honecker's speech stressed the importance of maintaining an adequate supply of consumer goods and the standard of living. The Politburo stated that the recent high rate of growth in East Germany is also the future aim of the party. Honecker described the next party congress as a "milestone for our social development."
